Subject: Thank you Jay McCleskey

Wayne-- Thanks very much for the time this morning. I know that the Governor very much enjoyed seeing you and values your friendship a lot. It was interesting to hear about the many impressive things you are doing in your life, and how you are utilizing your talents and blessings. The Lord is clearly working through you in many ways.

Per your request, I am sending along the information you requested, and also copying the Governor so you can keep in touch.

As we mentioned, we are working to effectuate significant change in New Mexico's primary elections next tuesday, June 5th. The purpose of our work is to materially impact the outcomes of 11 state senate and state house races via an aggressive mail and radio program aimed at likely voters. The bulk of the activity starts tomorrow, will come as a surprise, and be fairly intensive in nature until tuesday. The goal is to fortify the position of several allies who have cast courageous votes for the Govs agenda, and try and take out two or three overtly hostile members in the senate. If we do this right, it will also set the stage for greater success in the fall elections, where we should be able to win the majority in the House, and get a much better hand in the senate, with an outside shot to win it. With that combination, Susana will be in a position to get some of the bold reforms around education, taxes, the illegal immigrant ID bill and some other important things through the legislature, and truly become a national model for public policy.

Jay McCleskey, also copied here, is coordinating the effort directly and can speak to any specific questions you might have, but it is an approximately 250K effort, of which we are about 75K short of our goal. Our humble request is that you consider helping us bridge a good portion of that gap.

Thank you for your willingness to help on this, and please let me know if you need any further information.

If you could just let me know when you can do the wire so we can plan accordingly, that would be terrific. The election is next tuesday.

Very Best -

Phil

AFFIDAVIT OF RANDY TRAVIS

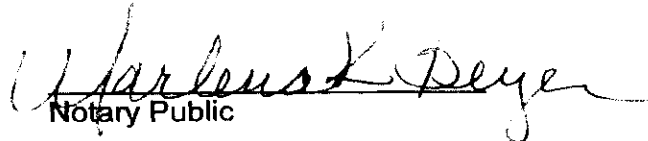

STATE OF NEW MEXICO)
) ss.
COUNTY OF DONA ANA)

I, Randy Travis, CPA, upon being duly sworn, state the following:

1. I am a Certified Public Accountant with experience in Regulatory Accounting matters. I provided independent accounting services to Picacho Hills Utility Company from 1993 to 2011. During this time I was aware that the Home Owners Association ("PHPOA") and the Bank of the Rio Grande made accusations that the company books were commingled. No one has ever produced documentation to support their claim and no one ever asked to look at the detailed books and records of the Utility in order to form such an opinion. Claims of commingling and/or embezzlement are unsubstantiated and therefore, false.
2. I have reviewed the Utility's 2011 Annual Report, prepared by the Receiver, Mr. Robert Martin and the Accountant, Ms. Massey. The Annual Reports do not make any adjustments or disclosures that disagree with prior period financial transactions.
3. The Receiver (Mr. Martin) and the Accountant (Ms. Massey) positively state there is no commingling or embezzlement between the Utility, the owner and any other entity. Their positive statement is on Page 8 of the Water Report and Page 14 of the Sewer Report. The statement is as follows: "Through an analysis of expenses (allocation study), no shared expenses were identified." I have attached those two pages. The entire report is available to the public by contacting the Records Division of the New Mexico Public Regulation Commission.

Randy Travis, CPA

SUBSCRIBED, SWORN TO AND ACKNOWLEDGED before me this 30th

Subject: Now the Bank and the PRC want to sell PHUC to the City before I sue the fuck out of them

Tom,

As I noted that Robert Martin, Court appointed receiver finished the 2011 PHUC Annual Financial Reports and found no evidence of commingling or financial abuse by me or PHUC. In fact the receiver used schedules and subsidiary ledgers prepared by my CPA Randy Travis. Regulatory Accounting is highly specialized and few can do it.

Today, when I returned from town, Bohanban Huston Engineers, engineers for the City were inspecting PHUC's wells and plant. It is clear that Mr. Robert Martin is on a mandate to sell PHUC immediately!!! The Bank cannot find, as alleged by the PRC in Case 315 any of the following:

1. Financial Abuse by myself as alleged by the PRC Staff though they have no CPA, Commercial Banker, securities experts on staff.
2. The NMED is satisfied and is renewing PHUC Discharge Plan to discharge to the PHCC Golf Course. All Mr. Biad can do is go back to 2010, even his greenskeeping staff and other members have no negative commentary.
3. The PRC has on file 7 complaint in 5 YEARS as noted by former PRC Staff and the Records Division of the PRC. So lack of quality service is absurd. Some "small" utilities have 10 times this amount in one year.

Dr. Jorge Garcia should be on your list to interview as now the Bank and PRC are pressing him to hurriedly buy PHUC, and get rid of me. The repercussion of my prevailing with both is very damaging. The City already in litigation with Moongate Water Co. in an attempted hostile takeover only adds to the chaos. I think that Dr. Garcia will meet ultimate resistance from me on any sale. I will carry this litigation to the end and I have comprehensive documentation on the Bank and PRC.

Matt, I wish to meet with Susana as this matter had gotten out of control and the Judicial System must be redirected to exercise justice and prudence. I am traveling to Santa Fe and would like to meet at the Roundhouse. The PRC continues to run rampant with no regard to the law. They sued me in Santa Fe and now do not have the protection of their own hearing examiners and attorneys.

Subject: Reagan Memo

publiusam.com tweeted a link to WSJ columns today on economic advice to Reagan in 1980--should consider signing up

Editor's note: The following are excerpts from a Nov. 16, 1980 memo to President-elect Ronald Reagan from his Coordinating Committee on Economic Policy. Its title: "Economic Strategy for the Reagan Administration." The memo describes an era similar to our own in its economic problems and public anxiety, laying out a strategy to address them. The complete memo can be read at Opinion.Journal.com. A related editorial appears nearby.

Sharp change in present economic policy is an absolute necessity. The problems of inflation and slow growth, of falling standards of living and declining productivity, of high government spending but an inadequate flow of funds for defense, of an almost endless litany of economic ills, large and small, are severe, they are not intractable. Having been produced by government policy, they can be redressed by a change in policy.

The Task Force reports that you commissioned during the campaign are now available. They contain an impressive array of concrete recommendations for action. More than that, the able people who served on the Task Forces are available to provide further detail and backup information to you or your designees. We all want to help and you can count on enthusiastic and conscientious effort.

Your Coordinating Committee has reviewed the Task Force reports. With due allowance for some differences in view about particulars and relative importance, we have found that they offer a substantial base for action by you and the team you assemble. We focus here on guiding principles, on priorities and linkages among policy areas, and on the problem of getting action.

You have identified in the campaign the key issues and lines of policy necessary to restore hope and confidence in a better economic future:

- Reestablish stability in the purchasing power of the dollar.
- Achieve a widely-shared prosperity through real growth in jobs, investment, and productivity.
- Devote the resources needed for a strong defense, and accomplish the goal of releasing the creative forces of entrepreneurship, management, and labor by:
 - Restraining government spending.
 - Reducing the burden of taxation and regulation.
 - Conducting monetary policy in a steady manner, directed toward eliminating inflation.

This amounts to emphasis on fundamentals for the full four years, as the key to a flourishing economy.

Guiding Principles

The essence of good policy is good strategy. Some strategic principles can guide your new administration as it charts its course.

- Timing and preparation are critical aspects of strategy. The fertile moment may come suddenly and evaporate as quickly. The administration that is well prepared is ready to act when the time is ripe. The transition period and the early months of the new administration are a particularly fertile period. The opportunity to set the tone for your Administration must be seized by putting the fundamental policies into place immediately and decisively.

Enlarge Image

Getty Images/Time Life Pictures

Ronald Reagan (center) meets with advisers, including George Shultz and Milton Friedman to his left, Sept. 1, 1981.

- The need for a long-term point of view is essential to allow for the time, the coherence, and the predictability so necessary for success. This long-term view is as important for day-to-day problem solving as for the making of large policy decisions. Most decisions in government are made in the process of responding to problems of the moment. The danger is that this daily fire fighting can lead the policy-maker farther and farther from his goals. A clear sense of guiding strategy makes it possible to move in the desired direction in the unending process of contending with issues of the day. Many failures of government can be traced to an attempt to solve problems piecemeal. The resulting patchwork of ad hoc solutions often makes such fundamental goals as military strength, price stability, and economic growth more difficult to achieve.

- Central problems that your Administration must face are linked by their substance and their root causes. Measures adopted to deal with one problem will inevitably have effects on others. It is as important to recognize these interrelationships as it is to recognize the individual problems themselves.
- Consistency in policy is critical to effectiveness. Individuals and business enterprises plan on a long-range basis. They need to have an environment in which they can conduct their affairs with confidence.
- Specific policies as well as long-term strategy should be announced publicly. The Administration should commit itself to their achievement, and should seek Congressional commitment to them as well. Then the public, as well as the government, knows what to expect.
- The administration should be candid with the public. It should not over-promise, especially with respect to the speed with which the policies adopted can achieve the desired results.

Seizing the Initiative

The fundamental areas of economic strategy concern the budget, taxation, regulation, and monetary policy. Prompt action in each of these areas is essential to establish both your resolve and your capacity to achieve your goals.

Budget

Your most immediate concern upon assuming the duties of the President will be to convince the financial markets and the public at large that your anti-inflation policy is more than rhetoric. The public, and especially the financial community, is skeptical and needs a startling demonstration of resolve. Many question whether you are serious about a sizeable cut in budget outlays. Credible FY 1981 and 1982 budgets which do that clearly and unambiguously would evoke an extraordinary response in the financial markets, and set the stage for a successful assault on inflation and a decline in mortgage and other interest rates.

The FY 1981 Budget will be almost four months along by the time you take office and a FY 1982 Budget will have been submitted for consideration by the Congress. There are now estimates of alarming increases in these swollen budgets. Prompt and strong action is necessary if these budgets are to be brought under control, as they must be. The nation can no longer afford governmental business as usual.

The formal budget alone is far from the whole story, though it is visible and Important. Off-budget financing and government guarantees mount and expand programs through the use of the government's borrowing capacity, draining the nation's resources without being adequately recorded in the formal spending totals. In addition, the mandating of private expenditures for government purposes has gained momentum as the spotlight has illuminated direct spending. These mandates are also a clear call by government on the nation's resources. Efforts to control spending should be comprehensive; otherwise, good work in one area will be negated in another. And these efforts should be part of the Administration's development of a long-term strategy for the detailed shape of the budget, four or more years into the future.

The Weinberger Task Force has identified an extensive and promising array of areas for potential savings, but it will be up to your Administration and the Congress to do the job. It takes top-notch people to do it. We recommend that:

- A Budget Director, permanent or pro tem, be chosen and set to work now.
- A small team from OMB be assembled explicitly to work with the newly designated Director.
- The Director's recommendations be a part of your discussion with Cabinet and sub-Cabinet appointees as these appointments are made.

Amendments calling for dramatic reductions in the FY 1981 Budget should be submitted to the Congress within the first week of your Administration. A thoroughly revised FY 1982 Budget provides even greater opportunities for large further reductions, and this budget should be submitted as soon as possible.

Finally, it has become all too evident in recent years that current budget procedures are biased in an expansionary direction. The Congressional budget process defined by the Budget Act of 1974 has failed to achieve its purpose of removing the "runaway" bias. We therefore recommend a presidential task force to develop new techniques which can help to rein in the growth of federal outlays. It should examine the presidential item veto, renewed presidential power to refrain from spending appropriated funds, and other initiatives to hold down spending. This task force should report to you within two months.

Tax Policy

Tax policy is properly the province of your Secretary of the Treasury. The making of that appointment should have a high priority so that important work can go forward. The Walker Task Force provides the materials needed to pose the issues to you in concrete form and to translate your decisions into a proposal to the Congress. This proposal should be presented early in the new administration in tandem with other key elements of your economic program. It should embody the main thrust of tax policy for the whole of your first term, not simply for the year 1981. We consider that the key ingredients should be your proposals for the Kemp-Roth cut in personal income tax rates, simplification and liberalization of business depreciation and a cut in effective taxes on capital gains (see Innovation Task Force). Consistent with your proposals earlier this year, the effective date for these reductions should be January 1, 1981.

Other key proposals are tax incentives for the establishment of enterprise zones in the inner cities and such other items as tuition tax credits, reductions in the windfall profits tax, inheritance taxes and the taxation of Americans living abroad, and the restoration of restricted stock options.

Regulation

The current regulatory overburden must be removed from the economy. Equally important, the flood of new and extremely burdensome regulations that the agencies are now issuing or planning to issue must be drastically curtailed. The Weidenbaum Task Force sets out the needed blueprint for personnel selection, immediate administrative action, and legislation. Again, the key to action is a knowledgeable and forceful individual to develop and coordinate strategy and to form a team to carry it out. Such an appointment should be made promptly, with the expectation that the effort would carry forward through the transition for at least a year into your Administration. Your appointee and his team should be located within the Executive Office of the President. Achieving regulatory reform will take informed, strong, and skillful work with the Congress, as well as with those in charge of departmental and agency regulatory efforts. The person heading up this effort will require your continued, wholehearted support.

Many of our economic problems today stem from the large and increasing proportion of economic decisions being made through the political process rather than the market process. An important step to demonstrate your determination to rely on markets would be the prompt end of wage and price guidelines and elimination of the Council on Wage and Price Stability.

To advance the entire regulatory effort—both to galvanize public support and to strengthen the positions of Administration appointees—we urge you to issue a message on regulatory reform in tandem with the budget and tax messages. The message should call upon state and local governments to launch similar regulatory reform efforts—as a few have already done.

Energy

The battle between government regulation and the private market is nowhere more apparent than in energy, where the market has a decisive comparative advantage. Governmental intrusion into energy production and use provides a glaring example of how regulation costs us all dearly. Alternatives to imported oil exist here in the United States. As the Halbouty Task Force emphasizes, market pricing and market incentives will accelerate the development of these alternatives, just as surely as present regulations and the politicization of this field inhibit them. Its recommendations and the issues it poses for careful review cover the energy field in a comprehensive manner and deserve immediate attention.

We recommend, also, that you promptly exercise the discretion granted to the President to remove the price controls on crude oil and petroleum products, rather than continue with the present calendar, which postpones complete decontrol until October 1981. This decisive action will eliminate at once the regulatory apparatus administering the entitlements program, and discourage continued efforts by special interests, to prevent or slow down decontrol and deregulation. Also, the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 should be repealed so that all natural gas prices are decontrolled. These measures are particularly urgent because the uncertainty of our critical Middle East oil supplies, dramatized by the Iran-Iraq war, makes it all the more necessary to get the earliest possible incentive effect of free market pricing.

The Synthetic Fuels Corporation is incompatible with the free market pricing of energy and should be promptly eliminated.

The Department of Energy has become a large and unmanageable institution with a variety of programs ranging from essential to useless. The essential functions should be transferred and the Department eliminated. This should be the main task of your Secretary of Energy.

Monetary Policy

A steady and moderate rate of monetary growth is an essential requirement both to control inflation and to provide a healthy environment for economic growth. We have not had such a policy. The rate of monetary growth declined sharply in the early months of 1980, and rose rapidly in recent months. These wide fluctuations are adversely affecting economic conditions and may continue to do so into 1981.

The McCracken Task Force emphasizes that the attainment of a proper monetary policy deserves the very highest priority and that such a monetary policy can be achieved through effective use by the Fed of its existing powers. The Task Force also brings out the relationship of monetary policy to budgetary and other economic policies.

The Federal Reserve is an independent agency. However, independence should not mean lack of accountability for what it does. In practice, independence has not meant that the Federal Reserve is immune to Presidential and Congressional influence. The problem is how to assume accountability while preserving independence. We suggest that you:

- Request the Fed to state targets for monetary growth year by year for the next five years that in its opinion will end inflation. Influential members of relevant committees of Congress have already urged the Fed to specify such long-term targets.
- Assure the Fed that you will propose and fight for fiscal and other policies compatible with the elimination of inflation.
- Improve the procedures for coordinating Federal Reserve monetary policy with the economic policies of the Administration and the Congress and support Congressional efforts to monitor the Fed's performance and to recommend changes in the procedures that could improve performance.

With these fundamentals in place, the American people will respond. As the conviction grows that the policies will be sustained in a consistent manner over an extended period, the response will quicken. And a healthy U. S. economy, as the Burns Task Force states, will restore the credibility of our dollar on world markets, contribute significantly to smoother operation of the international economy, and enhance America's strength in the world.

Organizing for Action

The activities of a wide variety of departments, agencies, and other units of government within the Executive Branch impinge on economic policy. But the flow of economic events does not recognize organizational lines. The economy itself operates as a system in which constituent parts are linked, sometimes tightly. The combination of interwoven problems and disparate organizations means that, in the process of policy formulation and implementation, some people high in your administration must identify the central ideas and problems and devise a strategy and tactics for dealing with them. Your leadership is essential to this effort.

One arrangement that has worked well in the past is for the Secretary of Treasury to be the chief coordinator and spokesman on economic policy, domestic and international. To carry out this mandate effectively, the Secretary should be one of your key staff members as well as a departmental head with a White House title and office. Since economic developments are often closely related to security, the Secretary should be a member of the National Security Council. For this coordinating role, an Economic Policy Board, with comprehensive membership, should be established; it should meet regularly and be the avenue through which economic issues come to your Executive of the Cabinet and to your desk. The Council of Economic Advisers might suitably provide the secretariat for this group.

Maintaining a Steady Course

Our final point is our most important one. The success of your economic policy will be a direct reflection of your ability to maintain a steady course over your full first term. Rough times will come and crises of one kind or another, some small, some of great moment, will arise. Sustained effort through these testing times means that public understanding and support are essential. Of equal and related importance is the understanding and support of the Congress.

This last task—gaining understanding and support of the Congress—is of crucial importance. As a result of the voting on November 4, the 97th Congress, we are convinced, will be more cooperative on economic and financial issues. That cooperation will be fostered if, during the transition, the Secretary of the Treasury (designate) consults intensively with key members of Congress on the design and implementation of your economic policies.

You have emphasized in your successful campaign precisely the strategy set forth in this document. In moving to implement it, you will be doing what the people voted for. Every effort must be made to maintain and broaden your base of support by improving public understanding and by close cooperation with the Congress. Cabinet officers and others in your administration can help in these tasks. Their ability to do so should be one important criterion in their selection.

At the end of the day, however, the burden of leadership falls on you: leadership to chart the course ahead; leadership to persuade that your course is the one to take; leadership to stay on course, whatever way political winds may blow. Through effective advocacy of the sharp changes so sorely needed, your leadership has brought us to this long-hoped-for opportunity at a critical moment for the nation. Your leadership can maintain this advocacy in the convincing manner necessary for a successful outcome.

The Reagan Memo

Some sage economic advice from 1980 for the next President.

Nearby today readers will notice excerpts from a memo written to Ronald Reagan by his economic advisers between his November 1980 election and inauguration. We share the memo because it shines a historical perspective on our own economic dilemmas as the Presidential race hits its Memorial Day turn.

The memo was sent to us by George Shultz, who later became the Gipper's Secretary of State but had served previous stints at Treasury, Labor and the White House budget office. The signers include some of the last century's most consequential economic figures, notably the great Milton Friedman, tax-cut evangelist Jack Kemp and former Treasury Secretary William Simon.

One lesson is how similar current economic problems are to those Reagan faced when he took office. The late-1970s were also a time of great economic anxiety fed by runaway government. Spending was out of control, taxes were too high, regulation too burdensome and energy too expensive. The big difference is that inflation today is lower, though food and energy prices have climbed fast until recently.

But the cause for optimism is that if the problems are similar, the solutions can also be similar. The memo is a tacit rebuttal of the White House talking point that today's Republicans are more radical than Reagan. Today's policy debates are remarkably similar to those 32 years ago. The Gipper's advisers wanted to reduce the cost of capital by cutting capital-gains taxes, for example, while Jimmy Carter thought like Mr. Obama that taxes don't much matter to economic growth.

A second lesson is the imperative for consistent policy that focuses on the long term: "The need for a long-term point of view is essential to allow for the time, the coherence, and the predictability so necessary for success."

An economy recovering from recession or other turmoil needs a steady, consistent hand. This gives business and entrepreneurs the confidence to invest and take risks, and it helps to build a durable recovery as Americans conclude a President isn't going to change policy every month for political reasons.

Reagan took his advisers' advice and focused on implementing his reforms his first year, then rode out various storms confident his policies would work in the long run. They resulted in a boom that added an economy the size of Germany's to U.S. GDP.

This is the opposite of President Obama's approach, which has been marked by the helter-skelter of temporary tax cuts, stimulus after stimulus, housing bailout upon housing rescue, favoritism for some industries over others, and arbitrary regulation that may or may not be mitigated if the White House feels enough political pressure. This is one reason in our view that the current recovery has been so lackluster.

The same lesson applies to monetary policy, even if inflation today isn't running at 13%. The Federal Reserve's policy fits and starts since 2008 have also contributed to economic uncertainty, as markets have had to absorb quantitative easing, Operation Twist and an unprecedented cacophony of Fed voices preaching greater ease or not. The next Fed Chairman would do well to heed the memo's advice of "conducting monetary policy in a steady manner" with the principal goal of price stability.

Perhaps the best reason to read the memo is as a reminder that, however large and insoluble today's problems seem, we have seen worse and solved them. The key is the right leadership with the right policies.

A version of this article appeared May 26, 2012, on page A12 in the U.S. edition of The Wall Street Journal, with the headline: The Reagan Memo.

Unbelievable statistic:

<http://blogs.wsj.com/economics/2012/05/26/number-of-the-week-half-of-u-s-lives-in-household-getting-benefits>

By Phil Izzo

49.1%: Percent of the population that lives in a household where at least one member received some type of government benefit in the first quarter of 2011.

Cutting government spending is no easy task, and it's made more complicated by recent Census Bureau data showing that nearly half of the people in the U.S. live in a household that receives at least one government benefit, and many likely received more than one.

The 49.1% of the population in a household that gets benefits is up from 30% in the early 1980s and 44.4% as recently as the third quarter of 2008.

The increase in recent years is likely due in large part to the lingering effects of the recession. As of early 2011, 15% of people lived in a household that received food stamps, 26% had someone enrolled in Medicaid and 2% had a member receiving unemployment benefits. Families doubling up to save money or pool expenses also is likely leading to more multigenerational households. But even without the effects of the recession, there would be a larger reliance on government.

The Census data show that 16% of the population lives in a household where at least one member receives Social Security and 15% receive or live with someone who gets Medicare. There is likely a lot of overlap, since Social Security and Medicare tend to go hand in hand, but those percentages also are likely to increase as the Baby Boom generation ages.

With increased government spending comes the need to pay for it, and if taxes aren't going to increase that means deficits. Nearly three-quarters of Americans blame the U.S. budget deficit on spending too much money on federal programs, according to a Gallup poll last year, but when the conversation turns to which programs to cut, the majorities are harder to find. For example, 56% of respondents oppose making significant changes to Social Security or Medicare.

The more people who receive benefits, the harder it's going to be to make cuts, and it's never popular to raise taxes. In some respects that argues for letting a combination of tax increases and spending cuts that is set to automatically hit in 2013 take effect. There's just one problem: the Congressional Budget Office says it would sink the economy into recession.

Letting the 2013 provisions come into force would be like dealing with a weight problem by cutting off your right arm. It may not be popular, but a long-term, well-planned diet is the only solution.

OK, I circled back with Demesia and Amy (who I trust a LOT) later this afternoon. They had briefed Jessica but Jessica wanted the confidential information and Amy just isn't comfortable with that since their confidentiality statutes are pretty fierce. At any rate, the upshot of our discussions was that Amy feels very comfortable after talking with firm's CPA that this particular contractor qualifies under at least 2 of the statutory conditions. In addition, it became clear that a TRD employee had really "vetted" this application prior to issuing the cert...i.e., he had called the CPA, asked questions, asked for additional documentation. If all this is true, Dee and I think we are fine. I talked with Dee after talking with Amy and Demesia and he feels if they qualify for more than the "grandfather" clause we are in great shape. I asked him to call Demesia and talk with her about that aspect since they can't tell us the confidential information but can/could state "firm qualifies under several sections of the new statute" or something like that. Reporter gave us time but would you all like a "regroup" conference call about 9 tomorrow morning? Let me know!!

The New Mexico border at Santa Teresa is the most vibrant area on the U.S./Mexico border right now. With Mexico's largest maquiladora, Foxconn, on the Mexican side making 55,000 Dell computers a day and transporting them to the U.S., the Santa Teresa Port expansion at the New Mexico border, the construction of the Union Pacific rail facility, plus the strong support of the Martinez Administration; logistics and manufacturing companies have shown strong interest in locating the area. Within the last few months, we've located three new companies here and several existing companies have expanded and are adding more employees. If anything we are seeing an incredible amount of business interest in southern New Mexico.

Energy op-ed attached. I sent to Heath today.

Susana Martinez: New Mexico's Energy Industry Is Crucial To Future Growth & Development

In order to create a lasting, thriving economy in New Mexico, we must unlock the potential of our energy resources. We can do this while simultaneously protecting our environment, if we base our regulatory decisions and policies on evidence and common sense. This will create and sustain high-paying jobs for New Mexicans, provide much-needed revenue to our state to fund critical services, such as education, and help make America less dependent on foreign sources of energy, all while safeguarding our environment.

It starts with changing the policies and attitudes toward New Mexico's oil and gas industry. Unfortunately, the Richardson/Denish Administration has adopted stances that undermine the industry and the jobs it creates. A recent column by the former Richardson/Denish secretary of energy, minerals and natural resources published in The Albuquerque Journal defends the pit rule, and demonstrates a complete lack of regard for just how critical this industry is to our future. (1)

When the Richardson/Denish Administration supported the pit rule, they endorsed significant new costs associated with drilling wells. Some have estimated those costs at nearly a quarter of a million dollars or more per well. When it costs an additional $250,000 to drill a well in New Mexico than it does in other states, it should surprise no one that production in our state decreases. In fact, New Mexico was the only energy-producing state in the country to see gas production drop last year.

Worse yet, most of the oil production in New Mexico is what's called "marginal production," and the additional costs associated with new drilling regulations threaten to reduce it greatly, or eliminate it completely.

But the troubling actions on the part of the current administration do not stop there. They have sent mixed signals to the industry and changed the rules in the middle of the game. For example, those interested in exploration in the Galisteo Basin complied with every state regulation – only to face roadblocks erected by Santa Fe County and supported by the Richardson/Denish Administration. Not only does that have the obvious negative impact on exploration and development, but it also undermines the state's credibility with the business community when its word cannot be trusted.

These anti-business policies were driven by extreme special interest groups and had little to no basis in fact. In essence, the Richardson/Denish Administration killed New Mexico jobs and reduced funding for our schools, in order to satisfy the narrow ideology of special interests.

And while, like on so many other issues, Diane Denish will try to claim distance from the administration's actions, it is important that voters understand that certain members of the Oil Conservation Commission (OCC) are appointed by the executive branch and responsible for many of the state's regulations, such as the pit rule. In turn, they report to the governor and lieutenant governor, not the legislature or anyone else. The folks who have held sway over both the OCC and the environmental department have been long-time Denish friends and supporters.

According to the Fraser Institute's 2009 Global Petroleum Survey, New Mexico discourages economic growth in the oil and gas industry. Citing a "corrupt government" and conditions that make it "very hard to make a profit," over 35% of oil and gas executives surveyed said they were deterred from investing in New Mexico or would not invest at all. These results stand in stark contrast to the rest of the country and very clearly demonstrate that the policies of this administration have stifled economic development in this critical sector.

As Richardson/Denish placate the radical elements of their party, these bad policies have had undeniably negative ramifications on New Mexicans. At the end of the day, unnecessary roadblocks and regulations mean less revenue for our state and severely diminished funds for our schools. During the worst budget crisis in New Mexico history and most difficult economic environment since the Great Depression, oil and gas revenue is expected to now represent only 13% of the state's revenues. Just a few short years ago, oil and gas revenue represented 20% of all revenues. When New Mexico needs their help the most, the Richardson/Denish Administration is pushing the industry out of the state.

I visited Hobbs in September and spoke with voters about the issues, and almost universally, they stated that we need to fix the pit rule. I responded that, as governor, I would address the pit rule immediately, recognizing the unnecessary and burdensome regulations it imposes on the oil and gas industry, which impede growth and job creation. Simply stated, it does much more harm than good. One has to understand that producers will simply conduct business in other states and, in fact, some now even refuse to come to New Mexico due to the regulations and burdens that have been placed on the industry.

And with the pay-to-play culture of the Richardson/Denish Administration, who knows what kind of abuses the oil and gas industry has had to endure and who has been the actual beneficiary of these misguided regulations.

But our challenges don't end with our policies in relation to the oil and gas industry. Now, the Richardson/Denish Administration is setting their sights on coal power plants by advocating new policies that threaten to push the plants, and their jobs, out of the state.

I strongly support efforts to increase the amount of energy produced from renewable sources, such as wind, solar, and bio fuels. But as we work to harness these new energy sources, we must recognize that New Mexicans now receive 90% of their electricity from coal-fired power plants and that percentage is not likely to drastically change overnight. Given the reality of the situation, the most practical way to protect our environment is to work with these energy producers to ensure we balance the economic and energy needs of our state with our commitment to protecting our environment.

I support creating incentives that encourage coal power plants to invest in new technology that will help coal burn more efficiently and reduce our carbon footprint. The San Juan Generating Station recently invested more than $300 million in improved technologies to help reduce emissions, and Business Week reported that the Four Corners Power Plant meets or exceeds all state and federal environmental regulations. We can certainly do more. Yet, rather than working with this industry to encourage further strides toward a cleaner environment, the Richardson/Denish Administration prefers to score political points with extreme environmental groups by passing excessive, job-killing regulations.

Another key to our energy independence is nuclear energy. While we must invest in renewable sources of energy like wind, solar and bio fuels, we must also accept the reality that we are not yet at the place where these renewable sources can meet our energy needs. Nuclear energy must be part of the solution.

Nuclear energy is a clean energy that produces no harmful greenhouse gases. It has the potential to meet many of our energy needs, and New Mexico is uniquely equipped to become a leader in nuclear power, given our labs and infrastructure. New Mexico can either be a leader in expanding nuclear energy, or we can once again lose out to our neighbors. As governor, I will ensure New Mexico is a leader in nuclear energy.

We are blessed by incredible natural beauty in our state and we all must work to protect our environment. With the right approach, New Mexico can be a leader in our nation's energy future as we harness and build new technologies coupled with our rich natural resources. However, in pursuing that goal, we must base our regulations and approach on evidence and science, rather than simply responding to the ideology of fringe, special interest groups. As governor, I will approach policy making related to energy with the thoughtfulness and respect it deserves and the same way I approach the criminal cases I prosecute. I will ensure that the regulatory process is one driven by facts and evidence, not by political winds.

We must recognize that in a global economy, businesses will locate or re-locate in places where they are most likely to succeed. In addition to enacting fact-based and common-sense regulations, I will work to create a business and worker-friendly tax environment whereby New Mexico can be competitive with neighboring states so our small businesses can create new jobs right here at home.

The only long-term way to dig out of our severe and historic budget crisis is to grow the New Mexican economy by helping our businesses thrive. That includes helping, rather than demonizing, the energy industry.

New Mexico Amigos Mobile App
May 12, 2012

Amigos,

App link: <http://www.nmamigos.com/app>

Hello Amigos and Welcome to Your New Mobile Web-App!

The New Mexico Past, Present and Future mobile itinerary app will be your mobile resource for the duration of the trip. The app will populate with information beginning

5/13/12. Until then we would like to walk you through the steps of adding our app icon to your device's home screen or bookmarks folder. This will ensure that you have quick access to our helpful web-app.

Have a great trip!

The R3 team

How to save NM Amigo Itinerary app icon to your home screen on the top 5 smart phones.

OS (iPhone, iPod, iPad): Adding app bookmark icon to home screen.

1. Touch the box/arrow or the + icon that's at the bottom of the screen, in the center of the bottom bar. Note: iPads will have this icon on the top of the window.
2. You should get a list of options that pops up.
3. Pick "Add to Home Screen"
4. On the next screen, type in the name you want to use for the app and click the "add" button
5. It should now appear alongside your other apps on your home screen.

BlackBerry: Adding app bookmark icon to home screen.

Press the "BlackBerry" key to bring up the pop-up menu and select "Add to Home Screen" from that menu.

1. Type in the name of the bookmark in the first text box on the screen. This box will default to the name of the page, so you don't have to change it if you don't want to.
2. Choose the folder that you want to save the bookmark to by selecting the box next to "Location" and choosing your desired folder from the drop-down menu. Press "Add" when you are ready to add the bookmark. Your bookmark will now be an icon on your home screen, or in the folder you selected.

HTC Rezound: Adding app bookmark.

If you are not already on the Home screen, tap the Home key.

1. Tap Menu.
 2. Tap Add.
 3. Tap Add bookmark.
 4. Enter the name of the bookmark, NM Amigos.
 5. Enter the location the bookmark should go to. Tap Done.
- The bookmark is now saved.
- Add bookmark to home screen

1. From the Home screen, select the menu icon.
2. Select Personalize.

3. Select Shortcut.
4. Select bookmark.
5. Select NM Amigos shortcut.

Android: Adding app bookmark icon to home screen.

Follow these steps to add a URL bookmark icon to your Android's home screen:

1. Bookmark the desired page from your phone's default browser.
2. From your Android's home screen, where you would like to add the bookmark icon, long-press (press and hold unoccupied space with your finger for about 2 seconds).
3. From "Add to Home Screen", select "Shortcuts" and then select "Bookmark".
4. Select the desired bookmark and BOOM, you now have a bookmark icon shortcut on your Android's home screen!

Windows Phone

1. Slide up the menu from the bottom of the screen
2. Select "Pin to start"

See instructions from Microsoft for more

<http://www.microsoft.com/windowsphone/en-us/howto/wp7/start/pin-things-to-start.aspx>

NOTE: If your phone is not listed here, the process will be similar.

How to use your app

Home screen:

-Day 1, this screen will have a welcome message with these directions and a short welcome message.

-Everyday, this screen will have buttons to your Itinerary, Quiz, NM (past, present and future photos page) and the amigo of the day bio page.

NOTE: you can access this screen only through launching the app. To navigate the site on other pages use the bottom NAVIGATION bar.

Itinerary Page:

-Day 1, Trip information button on top of itinerary.

-Top of app, use the "Next" and "Prev" buttons to navigate the days.

-After times, you will sometimes see a "x" or "xx" these are the required clothes for the particular event. Click on the x's for details.

Quiz:

-You will have access to five quizzes a day. You can look back at old quizzes via the "prev" button. You will not be able to skip ahead.

Bio Page:

-You will receive a new bio pic daily. You will not be able to see future bios but you can see previous bios via the "Prev" button.

NM Page:

-You will receive a new NM pic daily. You will not be able to see future pics but you can see previous NM pics via the "Prev" button.

Note: on new smart phones you can rotate your device to see a larger version of the pic.

Have a GREAT TRIP!

Ryan,

Sorry to be a pest, BUT can you let me know if there is any chance of us getting that $4,600 in the mail this week (dated May 7th or earlier)?

Thanks, brother.

Hey All,

Attached are the teachers lists and here's how we got them just in case there's any holes I haven't thought of.

We have no master list of all teacher e-mails so IT went through websites school-by-school and copied the publicly available staff emails. They formed the attached "TeachersAll" spread sheet.

We asked the budget division which districts have unions or agreements and they provided me with a list. Using the PED district codes, I filtered the addresses to pull out the non-union districts and the e-mails collected from each. So "FinalEmailListA" should be all the non-union teachers from the e-mails we've been able to gather.

There are over 20,000 teachers in NM.

Subject: Don't let National unions stop our progress

To view this email as a web page, go here.

Dear Supporters:

Recently, it was reported that a single national labor union has already spent almost $200,000 attacking me and our agenda in just the past few months. Another radical left-wing group funded by national liberals is secretly spending big sums of money, as well.

Now, these groups are promising to focus their attention on conservative candidates for the state legislature.

That's why I need your help today and why I am asking you to contribute to SusanaPAC by visiting here.

I formed Susana-PAC to help promote our agenda and elect more Republicans to office. And we've made great progress.

- We took on the culture of entitlement and waste by the powerful and got rid of expensive government perks like private jets and chefs.
- We balanced the budget in our very first year by cutting spending and without raising taxes.
- This year, we cut taxes for small businesses by over $100 million to help create jobs.
- We ended the dangerous "sanctuary" policy for illegal immigrants who commit crimes.
- We instituted reforms to stop corruption and get the lobbyists hands out of the state cookie jar.
- We are creating a business-friendly climate and Forbes magazine recently ranked New Mexico #4 in potential job growth.
- And, our education reform initiatives have led to New Mexico being one of only eleven states in the country to receive a waiver that frees us from federal regulations.

These victories, and many others, occurred because of your strong support.

But success, as they say, does not come without a price. And the price for our success is the anger of liberal politicians and special interests threatened by our reforms and desperate to get back the power they lost.

Your generous contribution of $50, $100, $500, $1,000 or whatever you can spare will help ensure we continue to make progress with our agenda by electing reform-minded candidates to office.

National left-wing groups are going to spend a massive amount of money this year to block our reforms, including our efforts to repeal the law that gives driver's licenses to illegal immigrants.

But with your help, we can level the playing field and continue to move New Mexico forward.

Thanks again for your support.

Susana

P.S. One national union has already spent $190,000 attacking me and my agenda. They are now promising to turn their sights on conservative candidates running for the legislature. Your generous contribution today will help level the playing field. Please visit here to contribute to SusanaPAC.
